Preface to the 2017 edition

We have already published A Pāda Index and Reverse Pāda Index to Early Pāli Canonical Texts (M. Yamazaki and Y. Ousaka, Kosei Publishing Co., Tokyo 2000), and also Saṃyutta-Nikāya I: Pāda Index and Reverse Pāda Index (S. Kasamatsu and Y. Ousaka, Philologica Asiatica, Monograph Series 23, 2008). Taking into consideration the statement by K. R. Norman, '[W]e may hope before long to see them provided for all Pāli verse texts, together with variant readings' (see the last paragraph in the foreword to the 2000 version), we have combined the above two pāda indexes (both forward and reverse) into one volume as A Pāda Index and Reverse Pāda Index to Early Pāli Canonical Texts (second edition). We hope that these combined indexes will be useful for scholars studying verses in Pāli texts.

Foreword to the 2000 edition

As will be clear from the quotation given at the beginning of the Preface to this volume, 1 have long been a believer in the value of pāda indexes and reverse pāda indexes. My need was expressed with particular reference to the so-called Patna Dharmapada, but it applies equally to the Gāndhārī Dharmapada, the Udānavarga, and any other verse text which includes parallels with other texts. My comment was made in 1989, when such indexes, if they existed, were usually made by hand and involved such an amount of work that editors of Pāli verse texts frequently chose not to have an index of pādas. If they did give a pāda index, they often confined themselves to listing merely the first pādas of verses. This, although useful, did not take account of the fact that verses in early Pāli texts were frequently compilations, made up from pādas of other verses. This, however, is not the whole of the story. It sometimes happened that authors borrowed parts of pādas, so that even an index of individual pādas would not necessarily identify a near parallel if the first word of the pādas differed.

Recognising the need, Professor W. B. Bollée published a complete pāda index to the Suttanipata in 1980, and a complete pāda index to the Dhammapada, together with a reverse pāda index to the Dhammapada, Suttanipāta, Theragāthā and Therīgāthā in 1983. Since then the advent of powerful personal computers has led to a situation where, after the initial labour of inputting a text into a computer, those with the appropriate software can without great difficulty generate indexes of words and pādas (both forward and reverse), and analyses of metre, syntactical features, etc. The advantage of making indexes in this electronic way is that the possibility of errors occurring in the compilation of the indexes is eliminated. The only errors are those which were in the original text as entered into the computer.

The Dhammapada. Suttanipāta. Theragāthā and Therīgāthā are four texts in which I have taken a particular interest, and I have published translations of all four of them with extensive notes. Either in connection with my original translations or in connection with revised versions which are in course of preparation I have made electronic editions which, with the permission of the Pali Text Society, I have made available to Professors Yamazaki and Ousaka. With the aid of these electronic data bases, they have made separate pāda and reverse pāda indexes to the Dhammapada, Theragāthā, Therīgāthā and Suttanipāta, of which the first was published by the Pali Text Society in 1995, and the last three were published as separate monographs by the Chuo Academic Research Institute, Tokyo (Philologica Asiatica, Monograph Series 12-14, 1997-98).

Valuable as these indexes are, the need to consult all four separately when searching for a parallel pāda has rendered them somewhat inconvenient to use. Recognising this and in response to requests from readers, the compilers have now combined the four indexes into one, in the same way that the same authors' indexes of five Jain texts, previously published separately, were combined as A Pāda Index and Reverse Pāda Index to Early Jain Canons (Kosei Publishing Co., Tokyo 1995). This has also given the opportunity to introduce variant forms of some pādas suggested in various appendixes and critical studies of these texts by Professor Bollée (Suttanipata), Professor L.Alsdorf (Suttanipāta. Theragāthā, Therīgāthā). and the present writer (Suttanipata. Theragatha and Therlgatha). We may hope to find in future versions of this multiple index additional readings of this type included from other critical studies.

The value of reverse indexes for research work involving fragments of manuscripts, or for finding partial parallels to a pāda, not necessarily including the first word, is now well known, and in view of the fact that such indexes can be made comparatively easily by computer, we may hope before long to see them provided for all Pali verse texts, together with variant readings. This opens up exciting possibilities for the study of Buddhist texts and also for the study of Jain and Brahmanical texts where a number of parallels to these pādas can be found.

K. R. Norman

Preface to the 2000 edition

In the concluding remarks in his paper "Notes on the Patna Dharmapada" in the Professor P. V. Bapat Felicitation Volume,[1] Professor K. R. Norman states: "We require a complete pāda index, because many partial parallels exist which cannot be traced by an index of first pādas only. It would, in fact, be helpful to have a reverse index of pādas, since frequently parallels to a portion of a pāda can be found, not necessarily including the first word." This also holds true not only for the other early Buddhist canonical texts, but also for early Jain canonical texts. What we essentially need are a pāda index and a reverse pāda index of each individual text. Only when a sufficient number of pāda indexes and reverse pāda indexes of canonical texts have been compiled will it become possible to find parallels to a pāda or to a portion of a pāda for every text.

To date, among the oldest Buddhist texts there are only pāda indexes to the Suttanipāta[2] and the Dhammapada.[3] We have a reverse pāda index to the Dhammapada, Suttanipāta, Thera- and Therīgāthā,[4] while for early Jain canonical texts a Jain Āgama Series contains an index of first pādas only. W. B. Bollée,[5] however, reports the existence of a complete pāda index to the Uttarajjhāyā in the Jain Swetambar Terapanthi Mahasabha Agam Granthamala, but we are sorry to say that it is not available to us.

By using a computer we were able to make considerable advances in the compilation of indexes to canonical texts. As the result of downsizing efforts, the capabilities of personal computers have recently advanced to a much higher level. Such advances in the development of personal computers have brought the compilation of indexes within the scope of realization. By using a Macintosh personal computer we were earlier able to publish pāda and reverse pāda indexes to early Jain canonical texts, and also word and reverse word indexes of those texts.[6] We then undertook to compile pāda and reverse pāda indexes of four Pāli canonical texts, the Dhammapada, the Theragāthā, the Therīgāthā and the Suttanipāta, and have already published them as a series of monographs.[7]

After the publication of this series we received many requests to combine the four indexes into one volume. We hope that this will allow the study of Pāli canonical texts to progress even further. In this book we present the complete pāda and reverse pāda indexes to the four canonical texts, the Dhammapada, the Theragāthā, the Therīgāthā, and the Suttanipāta. In addition, versions of several pādas of these texts that have been studied critically by scholars[8] in more recent years are also included.

Using a personal computer, we compiled the pāda indexes to the four canonical texts based on the Pali Text Society editions in the following way:

(i) First we removed several characters that were meaningless in the compilation of the pāda index from the character string of the pāda, for example, single quotation marks, double quotation marks, semicolons, brackets, question marks, exclamation marks and vertical double lines (‖).

(ii) Then we compiled the pāda index for the string obtained as above in the order of the Pāli alphabet shown below, ignoring all spaces and hyphens. Note that the apostrophe in a prodelided form like 'tivākyaṃ in the pāda is ignored in the calculation, but the pāda was put in the prodelided form in the index.

(iii) Under rule (ii), it sometimes happened that we could not determine the order of two pādas if they had the same character sequence except for spaces, hyphens, or apostrophes. In order to determine any character sequence we made the rules that a hyphen precedes all Pāli characters and that a space follows the hyphen. For clarity we show the artificial pāda index sequence in Table 2a.

Table 1. Pāli alphabet

In this table the symbol ○ in the pāda represents a space. Line information, for example "Dhp 35b", shows that the pāda "aā○uūe" occurs in pāda b of the 35th verse of the Dhammapada (see Abbreviation list).

On the basis of the pāda index obtained, we also took account of such transformations as shown in Tables 3 to 5, in order to produce the traditional arrangement of the pāda index as closely as possible. In Table 3, "ṃ + (k, kh, g and gh)" show the character sequences ṃk, ṃkh, ṃg and ṃgh, respectively. Let us explain the meaning of this table by using its first line. The character sequences in the forms ṃk, ṃkh, ṃg and ṃgh are read as ṅk, ṅkh, ṅg and ṅgh, respectively, and are put into their appropriate positions in the index, maintaining their original readings. Table 4 is obtained from Table 3 by replacing "ṃ" with "ṃ+ ○ (a space)". The meaning of Table 5 is different from that of Tables 3 and 4. First the character sequence of "ṃ +○ (a space) +(y, r, l, v, s or h)" is read as "ṃ +(y, r, l, v, s or h)" by omitting the space. Second we put "ṃ +(y, r, l, v, s or h)" between character sequences "ṃo" and "ṃk". This second operation was also applied to another pāda including the same sequence of "ṃ +(y, r, l, v, s or h)" in order to conform to the traditional arrangement of the pāda index.

In this way we have tried to produce the traditional arrangement of the pāda index by using a personal computer, and have almost succeeded in doing it. If you find any unfamiliar arrangement in the index, it stems from the automatic compilation of the index. Table 6 shows such a case. From the viewpoint of the traditional pāda index arrangement, a pāda in position A should appear in position B.

(1) ṃ + (k, kh, g and gh)	⇨	ṅ + (k, kh, g and gh)
(2) ṃ + (b, bh, p, ph and m)	⇨	m+ (b, bh, p, ph and m)
(3) ṃ + (c, ch, j, jh and ñ)	⇨	ñ + (c, ch, j, jh and ñ)
(4) ṃ + (d, dh, n, t and th)	⇨	n + (d, dh, n, t and th)

Table 3. Special character sequence I

(1) ṃ + ○ + (k, kh, g and gh)	⇨	ṅ + ○ + (k, kh, g and gh)
(2) ṃ + ○ + (b, bh, p, ph and m)	⇨	m + ○ + (b, bh, p, ph and m)
(3) ṃ + ○ + (c, ch, j, jh and ñ)	⇨	ñ + ○ + (c, ch, j, jh and ñ)
(4) ṃ + ○ + (d, dh, n, t and th)	⇨	n + ○ + (d, dh, n, t and th)

Table 4. Special character sequence II

ṃ + ○ + (y, r, l, v, s and h)	⇨	ṃ + (y, r, l, v, s and h), and then we put these character sequences between 'ṃo' and 'ṃk'.

Table 5. Special character sequence III

Finally we note that the reverse pāda index was compiled only on the basis of rules (i) to (iii), since the reverse pāda index taking account of transformations such as Tables 3 to 5 became increasingly obscure.

We would like to express our deepest thanks to Professor K. R. Norman, who kindly gave us the data for the four electronic texts, the Dhammapada, the Theragāthā, the Therīgāthā and the Suttanipāta. We are also very grateful to Professor R. F. Gombrich, the president of the Pali Text Society, who kindly allowed us to publish the pāda and reverse pāda indexes to the four Pali canonical texts.

This research was supported by a Grant-in-Aid for Scientific Research of the Ministry of Education, Science, Sports and Culture of Japan (ID No 12410006).
